

Sylexiad

The Sylexiad typeface is a range of fonts for adult dyslexic readers designed by Dr Robert Hillier. Extensive research identified the typographic characteristics adult dyslexic and non-dyslexic readers preferred and why. The design of Sylexiad was unusual in that the testing for readability and legibility was undertaken during the actual design process, which raised issues that both confirm and contradict current typographic principles of legibility.

Sylexiad has been used throughout the world in publications and public-facing web pages; from 2016 Sylexiad has been the dyslexia friendly font of choice used by Bloomsbury in their successful High Low series  aimed at struggling and reluctant readers and those children with English an additional language.
